Temperatures hit 43 degrees Celsius (111 Fahrenheit) in central Poland on Tuesday, according to Poland's national weather service. Polish skier Bartosz Godek plunged 5,500 metres (18,000 feet) into a tepid lake on Tuesday afternoon to complete a time of two hours, 15 minutes, 56 seconds, finishing well ahead of the five-hour-plus time set by compatriot skier Tomasz Gollob. The seasoned professional failed to complete the course due to his inability to navigate the lake, but managed to comfortably break the Pole's record for the steepest lake jump. The previous record of 4,700 metres (15,400 feet) was set in Switzerland in March. Thunder and lightning cracked across central and eastern Europe throughout Tuesday, as well as across northern Denmark, further south in Germany, as thunderstorms developed over the region. "The moment I've heard with absolute certainty is lightning hitting the canyon, which is a wonderful sound," Dane Rikke Bramsen told Reuters as she headed to a ski resort in the northern county of Langeland. Riding northwest of Copenhagen, she told Reuters that being in the mountains meant a more stable atmosphere, as winds sweep down into valleys and landscapes.Motorcycle News Motorcycle News - 2014 YAMAHA MEGASHIMA CMF AM YAMALOTE REVIEW Where do you begin with a motorcycle that looks like a watermelon that someone's going to eat within five minutes of buying it? 's are precision tools and most of us use these items often. Did you know that buttons are still being made from the exact same material as when Harry Potter first appeared on our screens and buttons were first made? Fancy that! Hey. Let me give you a little history. Back in the 19th century buttons are not much to be found and they were often seen as luxury items. In the 1810s, they still had to be hand stamped on the cloth and then embroidered on cloth. So if you wanted to customise your buttons. Then you did it yourself. In the 1910s we reached a more prosperous age and by then they were all made in factories. We also saw the great invention of the Sewing Machine. This changed the way we actually sewed and because of that we had an increase in the number of buttons on clothes. The button was added to help us fasten our threads on our garments. It was also perfect to help measure their length. That is until one day they invented Velcro. That birth marked a new era in button buying. In the 20th century, buttons seemed to keep coming up. They were essential in many ways. They were used to fasten our coats, trenchcoats, jackets and coats. They were used to keep us warm and to protect us from draughts and even the cold. Today, we still use buttons on many a garment ranging from sweaters, to coats, jeans, shirts, jackets and well even clothing for babies. And now you have got all the reasons to buy one as I am here with you. A super wide range of velvet, cotton and velvet buttons for you to choose from. You can have many uses for the material a button is made of and here are just a few: If you want your button to appear as solid as possible and to look like it's really made of leather, then have a go at having the dial made from black leather. You can get a range of different colours of leather. Want it to appear as solid as your favourite shoes? Then you can have the dial made from leather and the leather surround will look as good as the leather sole of your favourite shoes. Fancy having a shiny mirror on your dial? Think of having a mirror made from crystal. If you want your button to appear as sturdy as your best friends house, then why not have a go at using hard metal alloys. These buttons will
