There are three main features of AutoCAD that distinguish it from other CAD programs: its ability to store and construct 3D drawings, its intelligent relationship to other Autodesk programs, and its sophisticated array of technical tools. An object-based approach to drafting that evolved in the 1980s, AutoCAD simplifies the geometry by which objects, components, and entire drawings are represented. It also allows the drawings to be displayed on paper, on a screen, on a computer monitor, or on a 3D drawing surface. History AutoCAD is currently the most popular and most expensive CAD software application available. It was initially available for the Apple II, Apple II Plus, IBM PC, and Apple Macintosh. The first Microsoft Windows version of AutoCAD was released in 1990; it was subsequently released for Windows 95, Windows 98, Windows NT, Windows 2000, Windows XP, Windows Vista, Windows 7, and Windows 8 and 8.1. Starting in 1991, AutoCAD was available for Apple's Newton digital-pen devices and the Dell Tablet PC. AutoCAD Basic was introduced for the Apple IIgs in 1993. AutoCAD LT was introduced for the Apple Mac in 1999. In 2005, AutoCAD for Windows XP was discontinued. AutoCAD for Windows XP SP3 was released in 2010 and AutoCAD for Windows 10 in 2015. AutoCAD LT was discontinued in 2012. As of 2012, the Mac version of AutoCAD is no longer available in the Mac App Store and is no longer available for purchase from third-party resellers. On November 16, 2015, Autodesk announced the release of AutoCAD 2016 for the iPad. In February 2016, Autodesk acquired Google Project Tango, a location-based technology, and renamed it Project Tango. After the announcement of the Google Project Tango, Autodesk released several new apps to support Project Tango including: Autocad Mobile: Mobile Edition, formerly Google SketchUp Mobile, was a free app that combined the powerful features of Autocad with a tablet-optimized user interface. It's become something of a tradition in the college basketball world these days. In the weeks before the Sweet 16, contenders are hiring their own coach in the hope that their newly constructed pipeline will produce a homegrown hero. This week, some impressive local hires were announced. Chris Carrawell, with a "consultant" title, will be an assistant coach at Gonzaga after nine seasons at Oregon State. Kevin McGuff, with a "director of basketball" title, will be an assistant coach at Washington State after 11 seasons at Nebraska. Now, let me be clear about these two men. I love both of them. I have immense respect for their work, and think they will both be outstanding coaches. However, I must also point out that both are very familiar with the landscape of NAIA basketball. Carrawell played at NAIA powerhouse Midwestern State from 1986 to 1988, while McGuff was a four-year starter at NAIA independent Willamette. McGuff was the first coach to reach 300 wins in the NAIA (Wichita State) and is the active leader in career wins in the league with a career record of 288-66. Carrawell, a three-year starter, played for Jim Harris at Midwestern State. McGuff has been a fixture on the NAIA landscape since
