744The effect of acute ethanol administration on rat cerebrovascular permeability. Stereological measurements of the volumes of water spaces and of blood-brain barrier (BBB) walls from rats injected intravenously with Evan's blue revealed that ethanol increases cerebrovascular permeability. The increase in permeability was directly related to the concentration of ethanol administered. Initial increases in permeability, measured as the initial slope of the blue space/time curve for water, were maximal at 5 hours. Without resetting the permeability test, a delayed increase in permeability, measured as the delayed slope of the blue space/time curve, had a maximal increase of nearly 4% at 48 hours. The increase in permeability at 48 hours was not related to a gross change in the vasculature. A statistically significant proportion (13%) of the cerebral surface from the ethanol-treated animals were classified histologically as exhibiting BBB damage. The absence of biochemical evidence of BBB damage following experimental perforation of the BBB is discussed.

The new owners of Maroubra's Tavern No.1 have become the first in New Zealand to formally surrender their wine licence, effectively banning wine from being sold and drunk on their premises. Owners William and Susan Wingate intend to list the business on the future real estate market, after selling it to architect Fiona Riaune, who plans to turn the tavern into a restaurant. "It's where we started so we wanted to hold onto it and we'll continue to add value to it," Mrs Riaune said. The couple will be vacating the premises, located at Esplanade and Evans Street, in early summer and it was not clear where the family would stay. "As far as we know we will be leaving. Myself and my partner are looking at a job at a bar in Palmerston North. I don't know what we'll be doing in the bigger scheme of things, but we have a lovely family house and we'll start thinking about that." Mrs Riaune said that, once she had no alcohol on the premises, the business's only real use would be to host dinners and weddings. "We haven't put a definite date on it yet, but we want to make sure we don't run out [of wine] either." In August last year, councillors decided to demand that Mr and Mrs Wingate fulfil the licence conditions set out by
