Behçet's disease is a systemic inflammatory disease characterized by recurrent oral and genital aphthous ulcerations, ocular lesions, erythema nodosum, and pseudofolliculitis. The onset of the disease has been reported to coincide with a change in cyclic hormonal secretion, but not with menstrual cycles. In this paper, we analyze the data of our registry of Behçet's disease (Since 1988) and evaluate the influence of the menstrual cycle on the clinical manifestations. We studied the clinical characteristics of 32 women and divided them into three groups according to the phase of the menstrual cycle. Group 1 included those who had symptoms of our disease in the follicular phase. Group 2 included those with symptoms of the disease in the ovulatory phase, and Group 3 included those with symptoms in the luteal phase. The mean duration of the disease was significantly shorter in group 1 (3.75 +/- 2.14 years) than in group 2 (4.5 +/- 3.52 years) and group 3 (7.2 +/- 5.02 years). Oral and genital aphthous ulceration appeared more frequently in Group 1. Erythema nodosum and pseudofolliculitis was found more often in group 2 and group 3. Joint complaints were almost equally distributed between the three groups. We consider the results of our study and the hypothesis of increased risk for Behçet's disease during the luteal phase in menstruating women, especially with a history of oral and genital aphthous ulceration, as an argument for early referral and diagnosis. A: This appears to be the karaoke version of the monologue from this play: It's based on the short story "What's so funny" by Ray Bradbury, and is in turn based on "Captain Vatiou is a little too much", a play based on an article of the same name by the same writer. Broadway version (link no longer active) can be found on Amazon for example. I have no idea if it's the same version, but he uses the same delivery - although the end is a bit different. Well, this was one I was really looking forward to! I loved her character design, and it was so gorgeous! Not sure if
