

Speakerman is a retro-styled experience themed after 80's MS-DOS PC games, featuring puzzle-platforming, exploration and collect-a-thon gameplay elements. It features classic CGA graphics (with a twist) and classic PC Speaker sounds mixed with modern music. From the start you can pick either Open World Mode or Story Mode. The Open World Mode offers non-engaging fun during which you can listen to podcasts or music without being fully distracted, though should you delve deep into it there's plenty to find and unlock, including difficult-to-discover easter eggs. Story Mode offers a challenging and thought-provoking platforming experience, and is recommended for experienced gamers who have played Open World Mode for at least a few hours. All these classic games can be played for free on Google Play! Tetris • Slalom • Centipede • Galaxian • Arkanoid • Klax • Dragon's Lair • Final Fight • Pac-Man • Double Dragon • Gauntlet The Hill Climb • Pole Position • Alley Kat • Pole Position 2 • Pole Position 3 • Pole Position X • Pole Position Players • Pole Position Soccer • Pole Position Cars • Pole Position Snowboard • Pole Position Snowboard Mini • Pole Position Snowboard 2 • Pole Position Snowboard 3 The classic arcade games are easy to play, but difficult to master! Each game has a high score table so you can compare your progress to friends and leaders. For mobile users, the games are also displayed in 4x3 and 3x4 layouts to ensure easy control. The games are constantly updated with new content. The main criterion is to ensure the game runs smoothly on all devices. The game has been developed using the latest technology by the top company in the world for mobile video games: MachinGames Get the most out of your iPhone with this indispensable Swiss Army Knife of an app. Google, Microsoft, Apple, and a myriad of other highly developed technical programs all have databases accessible via iCloud. You can sync all your contacts from your iPhone to your Mac, and from your Mac to iCloud. Plus you get a free email address. But the problem is that each program has its own database, making managing your data a daunting chore. So to make managing your contact data easier I created ContactSync. ContactSync syncs all your contact data in one place, and makes it easy to access all your data on any platform. Storing your

Q: Display system return codes in NT logger I am interested in finding out where I can get the return codes stored in windows. I am using the Event Viewer in the NT Event Logs. I am capturing both the Ctrl-C type of return codes and the 'normal' NT write errors and I want to handle them differently. I am aware of the possibility that a Windows service can stop its self without doing the standard 'ERROR_SUCCESS' before returning. This means that NT will return the service's return code and NOT a standard NT return code. I want to have something that will allow my application to handle these errors in an otherwise standard way, and not have the errors stop in the middle of my application. A: The most common method is to create your own Application event log. Go into Event Viewer, and in the left pane select 'Windows Application'. In the list at the top select 'Create log'. Give it a name and description, and you can use the same underlying Event Log infrastructure that Event Viewer uses, and then just create a new type of event and then you can capture the error messages you want. When you create your log, you should set 'Apply to all the users' to 'no user'. The event log is so verbose that it will be a huge pain to have it apply to everyone. Note: If you need more granular control, then look into psexec (a Windows tool) instead of 'application logging'. The psexec will allow you to run a process in the context of another user (the target process).

Q: JSTL basic scriptlet I have a java class "MyClass" where I have a method that is public int getRowCount() { int cRowCount; Statement s = null; try { s = conn.createStatement(); ResultSet rs = s.executeQuery("SELECT ROW_COUNT() FROM myTable");

What's new:

's The Spirit Part 2 By Juel Carmen The mindless ritual posing for pictures with fans as the crowd screamed 'rock 'n' roll' three times. The bewildered disbelievers who respond to "Do you like real human?" question with "What's that?"; the bickering with the groupies, the gaggle of suited gangsters, the loose snarls at the official photographer. The adoring flattery of band personnel.. It is all too familiar a scene, unfortunately especially since "My Machine" (above) won the best music video FADER 2012 award, an incessant choreographed karaoke duet with his current lover/manager (left in photo). For a very long time, I had never thought of Jaden Smith in anything other than terms of pure speculation. But then "My Machine" was released and all hell broke loose. From this point on, I cannot count on one hand the number of times I have seen or read articles about this 24 year old young white twink in this famous ship: Jaden Smith - the foursome that is. It just doesn't make any sense to me. And I didn't like it at first. Below is my early attempt to describe why I am convinced that the term 'twink' is shamefully underused in 21st century pop culture discourse. Long before I was aware that I had a sexuality, and while I was still curious about every fact, every nuance of who I was, I became aware that the idea of a 'twink' was a dominant point of reference in a new sexuality, and had acquired a derogatory air. A lot of people, like myself, flinched when we saw that the album cover for the Mark Ronson single "Uptown Funk" re-appropriated the iconic poster for The Spirit, the Christian youth training organization of the late Sixties. And in doing so, and in acknowledging the controversial mascot as a LGBT icon; in owning up to how the image was used, Flopmouth, in collaboration with PFLAG and Unify/Design by Ramin Bahrani, dared to update this icon, to ultimately turn it into a way of communicating that "Everybody's a little bit gay, and everybody is so fabulous." The empire of teenage hedonism. Here are some AB2088 is widely known for his impulsive live performances, courageous journeys through a wide variety of musical genres and challenging, mind bending compositions. AB2088's music is deep, hypnotic and unique, its highly experimental nature pushing the limits of intelligent sound design. "Live", however, has always been an important part of AB2088's music, whether it is mixing live instruments or his own synthesizers. AB2088 is not a one-man-show - he employs a host of instrumentalists, some of them veterans in the electronic music scene, a live section of the audience volunteers, a group of musicians performs as a rock band, and his voice is shared with an additional live vocalist. AB2088 is very passionate about his work, and his musical ideas and visions are often developed before the live performances, deeply influenced by his collaboration and using musicians from the classical and rock music scene as well as other electronic music techniques, mixing them all live. AB2088's compositions are all rooted in the future of electronic music, a heavily improvised sound in which the rhythm, the melody and the harmony are developed together in real-time, a dense fabric of analog synthesis and organic sounds. AB2088 also deeply cares about the environment and supports the COVID-19 crisis, therefore his discography is free of DRM. AB2088's music has been described as "rock meets electro", "fusion", "dark electro", "electrocore", "beat poetry", "electrocore house", "electro-folk", "experimental", "psychedelic" and "space" - all these descriptors are just a few of them. AB2088's live performances always feature a huge variety of musical materials and instruments (from live percussion to drones, from two-piano to electro-orchestras, from live vocals to analog synthesizers, drum machines and all kinds of loops, vocals, effects, delay boxes, amplifiers, mixers and more), a large-scale, anarchic, free improvised live set.
