As a result of various factors such as severe illness, injury, surgery, or natural aging processes, or due to certain hereditary conditions, spinal stenosis can occur when the spinal canal or vertebral foramen becomes too narrow and limits the flow of oxygenated blood to the spinal cord. Stenosis can cause back pain, leg pain, and even sudden death. The most common symptom of spinal stenosis is progressive neuropathy. Patients with spinal stenosis often experience paresthesias, numbness, muscle weakness and/or pain. Over the years, a variety of materials and techniques have been used in an attempt to alleviate the pain and discomfort associated with spinal stenosis. Such materials and techniques include, but are not limited to, alcohol soaking (i.e., lumbar abrasion or burring), redirection of the spinal cord's blood flow, chemical embolization of the spinal arterial branch arteries, and spinal cord stimulation, where a lead is surgically implanted directly into the spinal cord. The most widely used surgical procedure for the treatment of spinal stenosis is laminectomy, which is the surgical removal of the lamina or bony posterior arch that covers and protects the spinal cord and spinal nerve roots. 6d1f23a050
