You get the Atari VCS 600, controllers and more with an upcoming cartridge release from <http://steelball.com/arcade> (via Atari Vault) or via the Atari VCS store if you already own games from the Atari system. The Atari VCS 580 is now available, with games compatible with the Atari VCS Classic Joystick and a library full of industry-leading titles (via the Atari Vault) or the Atari VCS store if you already own games from the Atari system. As for future releases, developers such as Emulated Arcade and Muse Software are making available games that will be compatible with the Retro Controller and/or Classic Joystick. Games such as Asteroids are also making their way to the Atari VCS store via atari.com, launching in 2020. The final games in the Atari Vault will be released sometime this year. Atari already has some announcements slated for later in 2019. This will include ports for the VCS 800, Atari VCS 5200, Atari VCS VRC7 and Atari VCS Arcade. Each one of these releases will include multiple gaming titles, with a total of 30 games in the collection. These include: Face to Face - an R-Type-style arcade shooter Around the World - a sports game that was also released as part of the It's Tetris 3 for Atari 5200 Flaming Fireball - another arcade sports game Hook, Line and Sinker - an arcade puzzle game based on the board game Transport 2000 - a driving game similar to Road Rash Rolling Coin - an arcade game where the player tries to win by making the coin as big as possible Leap Frog - a basketball game similar to Real Basketball Rolling Thunder - an arcade racer Ultimate Rally - a rally car driving game

My first project was a mighty battle in the skies of Basketbrawl, a cross between Quake and a Space Invaders style classic arcade game. But it's not set up to play as an arcade game, but rather as a single-player adventure game, with the added bonus of the ability to play with a mouse to move your plane and flick its rockets to fire. It's probably the closest you'll get to a more action-packed Doom on the Atari, or at least to a game that's less aesthetically pleasing than Doom on the Atari. The AI controlling the enemy vehicles is also very tough and you often have to resort to suicide tactics to avoid them, and if they take you down, you'll have a tougher time regaining your footing and sending them back for a second dose. As we end on a positive note, its great to see that Atari has realised the potential of the internet. Whilst theres very little Atari related news, and that puts a lot of arcade players off from logging onto social media, theres some cool stuff on there. They have some classic games in the works, they are getting e-sports events going on, and perhaps most importantly, they have an official website. Theres not much point in going on the internet to find anything else that you could know that what they are releasing over the next few months. Its a big, visible step forward for Atari. Surely, after so many years of people saying that theres nothing else left to come from Atari, its something to celebrate. And now you can download the Atari VCS emulator on the best iOS and Android operating systems. The emulator allows you to play almost every Atari game on your smartphone or tablet. This game is compatible with online streaming and many peer-to-peer or online modes. You are able to play the game while you sleep, and the weather will not be a problem. Get More Games From
